Non Credit Courses Offer Fun, Films, Activities, For Summer

Would you like to swim, sew, decorate, or look at movies this summer?

For entertainment and self-improvement a dozen courses will be offered by Brigham Young University during June and July on a non-credit basis.

Film Classics for children will be among the courses offered by Adult Education and Extension Services. Ten of the all-time greats in movies for children will be shown.

Included in this will be educational and entertaining films of interest especially to children of the age group of eight through fourteen. Cartoons will also be included in the two-hour program which will be presented each Tuesday and Friday at 2 p. m. for five weeks.

Admission will be by series tickets which may be purchased in advance at the Extension Services office or at the first program for $2.50 per person. The program will be presented in room 261 McKay Building, beginning June 11.

A basic instruction course in swimming for college age women or older will be held June 11 to July 11.

Persons who sew, but desire to increase their speed efficiency may take the class Speed Methods in Sewing, which will be held Monday and Wednesday evenings beginning June 10. A class including basic discussions dealing with principles of successful home decoration, colors, fabrics, and woods will begin June 17.

Basic instruction and information to interest the more advanced photographer on color, flash and exposure effect will be taught beginning June 13.

A course emphasizing how to get along with oneself and others will be held from June 12 to July 10. For persons interested in crafts as a hobby, who would like to work in an area of their choice, a course starting June 12 will be held on lower campus.

A class in Legal Terminology will be offered to acquaint legal stenographers and others interested. It will begin July 18. Instruction in Hy-speed Longhand will be taught from July 15 to August 16.

For children and young adults, a special series of courses have been organized which will cover personal charm and will begin July 9.

Dealing in various aspects of dramatics, a course in dramatics will begin July 8. Classes in Spanish, French and German for children ages eight to 14 will begin June 10.

Information of the various courses being offered on a non-credit basis may be obtained from the Adult Education and Extension Services at BYU.

Leadership Week Set; Family To Be Theme

Leadership Week 1957 is aimed at the family. The annual week of classes and events sponsored by and held at Brigham Young University, is directed to help participating families face the future better informed and more aware of family duties and responsibilities.

Persons attending the June 24-29 activities will participate in events and classes built around the theme "The Family Faces the Future." The 34th annual Leadership Week is presented by BYU Adult Education and Extension Services in cooperation with the university's colleges.

Open to All

Leadership Week is open to all interested persons and information about registration and housing may be obtained from the BYU Adult Education and Extension Services office.

Many special events are planned, according to Harold Glen Clark, dean of extension services. Activities will begin with the presentation of "Life With Father, a family comedy starring BYU talent, June 24.

Official Leadership Week reception will also be held June 24 and the BYU presidency and other Leadership Week officials will attend.

A symposium of Archaeology of the Scripture will be conducted daily and discussions will be presented by the BYU Archaeology Department. Another daily event will be showing of appropriate family movies, including premiere of "How Near to the Angels," BYU produced film sponsored by the Mutual Improvement Association of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Student stars of the cast will appear at the June 26 showing.

Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir will present a Leadership Week concert June 27 with narration by Richard L. Evans, member of the Council of Twelve Apostles of the LDS Church.

Sports night June 25 will feature athletic demonstrations and various physical education exhibitions. Other events during the week will include the Paganini Quartet, flower show, civil defense banquet, films, tours and devotional assembly.

Courses of instruction will range from improvement on teaching to "helps" for LDS Church auxiliary workers. Additional series will include a Ford Foundation Adult Education class, development of leadership in America program, genealogy courses, and exercise, religion, speech, drama and music courses.

English Dep't Hosts Institute

Fifth annual Language Arts Institute, sponsored by the Utah Council of Teachers of English, will be held at Brigham Young University Friday and Saturday. Theme will be "Language as a Skill and as an Art."

The institute is under the general chairmanship of Dr. Leon W. Rice, chairman of the BYU English Department and president of the Utah Council of Teachers of English.

First session Friday morning will feature developmental reading discussed by a panel of elementary, secondary and intermediate grades, as well as junior and senior high schools.

Remedial reading will be discussed Friday afternoon, with talks on diagnosis of reading problems followed by discussion of methods and mechanical devices useful in improving reading.

Saturday morning's session will feature literature in general and sectional meetings. Special luncheon and breakfast meetings are also planned, and exhibits will include book displays, visual aids and educational motion pictures.

Mrs. Mabel Noall, teacher of reading at Boston University School of Education, will be a featured speaker and will also conduct a symposium of experts on remedial reading.

She previously specialized in teaching remedial reading at University of Utah, and has done work on her doctorate at University of Southern California.

Council Counsels . . .

Honor Code Violations Decrease On Campus According To Sociology Department Studies

Honor Code violations at Brigham Young University are increasing percentagewise, though actual cases reported are increasing, according to studies made by the sociology department.

Honor Council Chairman Eugene Kingdon reported more than 200 cases were handled during the last academic year. Only 10 of these are expected to be repeaters if past averages hold true.

Council Counsels

"It is the job of the group to counsel violators of the code, but the 16-member council has no punitive power. One member is assigned to each student-violator at weekly meetings and that member follows the case to completion.

According to Kingdon, violations are overall a mixture between the Word of Wisdom and academic standards. Serious violations are automatically referred to the faculty committee on honors.

Kingdon's organization is designed with the hope of bringing about the "best counseling relationships possible." Serving with him is Norman King, Darlington, Ida., administrative vice chairman, and Dick Gibson, San Francisco, Calif., vice chairman to assist with cases.

In addition, the council is broken into committees for special purposes. A 10-12 minute film will be released next year, title is tentatively "Your Honor," is also to be distributed.

The Honor Council works in direct cooperation with the student coordinator and student-body president, faculty and student-body representatives, respectively.

For the first time since its inception the council will be active during summer school sessions. Kingdon and several of his staff will be available during the summer.

As part of a "preventive maintenance" campaign, new signs have been placed in classrooms, and a recent student poll was conducted with a faculty poll planned for the future.

INFORMAL INVITATION

Once again it's summer quarter at Brigham Young University, and time for high powered education to relax and take a back seat.

This does not mean to imply that classes become any easier in summer. In fact, because so much must be learned in such short time they are probably much harder.

FRIENDLY ATMOSPHERE

But with summer, the studentbody enrollment drops from 8000 to 2500. And BYU again becomes a small time college with all the warmth it formerly had at once had before World War II.

Professors who have maintained stiff white collars and dark suits all winter as their chief mode of clothing, now sport loud Hawaiian shirts, with white summer shoes. Students may be seen sitting on the lawn in bright summer attire eating popsicles and trying to beat the heat while cramming for exams.

OUTSTANDING ACTIVITIES

In addition to the usual friendly atmosphere found at BYU during summer quarter, the administration has planned a series of concerts, Graduate conferences, assemblies, clinics, and social functions to attract outstanding groups and students to the campus.

Among the concert artists to be heard on campus this quarter will be the Paganini Quartet, a string ensemble; Carl Fuerstner, pianist; Flo French, actress; Brandt Curtis, tenor J. J. Keeler, organist; The New Art Wind Quintet, Robert Brownlee, pianist; and Anna Julia Hoyt, mezzo soprano.

Clinics, workshops, institutes and conferences rank high on the list of activities planned this quarter.

Included in these activities are events concerning economics, speech, junior engineers, acting, dramatics, nutrition, debate, theater, photography, and others.

Many outstanding speakers are slated to give talks in assemblies, devotionals and lyceums, among them President Ernest L. Wilkinson, Howard R. Driggs and Viktor Fuchs.

TIMP BECKONS

Paramount among activities of summer is the Timpanogos Theater, an annual program held at Aspen Grove the evening of July 31. The program will be followed by the Timp hike on the morning of July 14. Some 1,000 persons are expected to climb the 12,000 ft. Mt. Timpanogos.

This hike promises to be one of the largest ever undertaken, and should highlight the summer session.

DIAMOND DILLIES

An editorial on baseball! Well . . . why not? Maybe this isn't the Sporting News, but it is summer and there are some exciting diamond races around, especially in the major leagues.

Which is an adequate reminder that many BYU students will soon be rooting for a "legitimate" major league home team. In fact, two of them if the New York Giants move to the Pacific Coast with the Dodgers, as reports indicate they will.

RIVALRY SPREADS

With so many Y students from California, it is even likely that "major league fever" will sweep the campus again, not only for one team, but for the natural Giant-Dodger rivalry-moved-West.

But what of diminutive Ebbet's Field and the hometown Polo Grounds? Charley Ebbets and John McGraw, Dixie Walker, Mel Ott, Babe Herman, Leo Durocher, Pete Reiser, Bill Terry and Mickey Owen? All famous pages of baseball history, as only the Giants and Dodgers could have written it.

Will Los Angeles ever seen another Frenchy Bordeaux stray shading a fly ball to pick up a fallen cap? Or, will San Francisco ever see another Mel Ott tee off on a home run from such an inimitable stance?

GRAVE TURN

Maybe Charley Ebbets and John McGraw are turning in their graves thinking of the Dodgers and Giants moving westward. Maybe they're even worried about the color and glory they were so much a part of bringing to their respective clubs. Then again, maybe they have no reason to worry at all.

California students at the Y have displayed enough "spirit de corps" to show they will not only gracefully inherit the color and glory of these two teams, but add much more of their own. Sunshine and palm trees will be a good diet for major league baseball, and it should prosper in California.

This is all theoretical, of course, hoping the way being clear to move also means the day is at hand to move. The teams haven't packed up the resin bags and bases yet, but somehow it isn't likely they won't move to the coast.

If and when the teams move, BYU should pick up where the East River left off separating the Dodgers and Giants as rivals. Not only among Californians, but among the studentbody as a whole. So here's to Big Time rivalry —may it ever stay friendly.

Disclosure

Dear Editor

Much has been said recently on the subject of an increasingly apathetic attitude being adopted by college students, and particularly those at BYU. I think an outstanding example of this is the recent disclosure that there is to be no Freshman Week at BYU next fall.

Does it not seem logical that the social training this week is a vital part of university life should begin at the beginning of the college career, as does scholastic training?

The word now is that next year, instead of an initiation week to impress upon incoming freshmen their responsibilities to adjust to the college level, they are to be welcomed as honored guests to the campus while enjoying one also bows to their convenience.

But is this a good idea? It is all too obvious that during recent years the trend of the intellectual level has been down and then guided the right way than raising the freshman to the graduate level. This is readily seen from the abundance of such activities as falling paper airplanes in assemblies, boxing and hissing at athletic events, writing on and kicking in walls in the dormitories, and marching in the freshman beanies in complete ignorance of the playing of the "College Song."

It should be remembered that the important idea behind initiation week is that of impressing upon the freshman his responsibility to adjust to the collegiate scholastic life, as practical (we hope) by the upperclassmen. Of course the freshmen will grow and develop. But does growth come from our successful revolts, or from being humbled and then guided the right way by someone with more experience than we?

And so I suggest that the solution to this problem will be found, not in bowing to our weaknesses, but in strengthening the weaknesses and realizing the purpose and goal of our traditional freshman week

Sincerely,
J. Norman Smith

Sugar Bowl Blues Put Mood Into Food In Passionate Eat Heaven

DALLAS, Tex., (95)—In an exclusive Dallas restaurant, diners usually do a double-take when they reach for the sugar bowl . . . the contents are heavenly blue.

The heaven-shaded sugar does things for the food boulder adding to the decor of the Zodiac room at Neiman-Marcus and making the blue crystal look even bluer.

The sugar in limeade gives a deep-sea hue, frosting the rim of a fruit cup it gives a particularly icy look and coffee with cream turns a pale mauve.

A West Coast confectioner makes the blue sugar for the Dallas store only, though it can be purchased, complete with the blue sugar bowl, in the restaurant.

If you would like a good table conversation piece, make some in your own kitchen to matchchina or crystal. Just add a few drops of food coloring to ordinary white sugar and stir until all the white disappears. Spread on waxed paper to dry.

Y Athletic Events Hit All Time High During Past Year

Athletically speaking, one of its most rewarding years in the school's sports history has just been completed.

Under the direction of new head coach Hal Kopp, the Cougar golfers managed to dislodge themselves from the Skyline basement. Jelling rather late in the season, the Cats moved up one step on the conference ladder.

Completing 71 passes for 945 yards, quarterback Carroll Johnston ended the season as the Skyline's top aerial artist.

The front wall managed to overshadow any shortcomings if the varsity football record left something to be desired.

Coach Max Tolbert's Kittens enjoyed an undefeated season, scoring more than 40 points a game while holding the opposition to an average of one touchdown a game.

Surprisingly enough, the boys of Stan Watts paid little attention to the preseason forecasts as they fought their way to the conference championship. When December rolled around the Cougars were ready for basketball.

While the varsity cagers were fooling the experts, the freshman basketball team headed by Coach Bob Bunker, staged a winning campaign of its own.

As he took over the duties as wrestling coach, Allen Davis moved together a senior-less team that finished in fourth place in the Skyline Conference meet at Wyoming.

The winning ways continued through spring quarter as the track team had little difficulty in notching their third Skyline title at Missoula.

The Cougars were unbeatable through preseason meets in the tumbleit as they topped New Mexico easily and then squeezed past Arizona and Arizona State by identical scores.

The team members won the Western Division meet at Provo with points to spare in addition to setting five conference marks during the course of the season.

Coach Buck Dixon's golfers won the division crown, but were forced to settle for fourth place in the Skyline meet at Colorado State. After splitting with Utah in division play, the BYU tennis team placed second in the Skyline finals at Logan.

Coach Jay Van Noy and the BYU baseball team started from scratch with a handful of baseball prospects and led with Utah for second place honors, behind Utah State.

Botany Garden Compassed Like Map Of United States

by Jerry Molloy
Daily Universe Writer

Trees that are now admired in the Provo area were first brought here by the pioneers.

Upon arriving in Utah Valley, they found bunchgrass instead of the sagebrush as is commonly assumed. The abundant sagebrush in the area now is a result of overgrazing and abandoned farm land.

Few Found

The pioneers found trees only along the streams and in high mountains of Central Utah when they arrived. About 15 per cent of the trees now in Provo are of European or Asiatic origin and about 20 per cent are native to Utah.

Due to the sparse rainfall of 15-17 inches annually irrigation is necessary.

In 1941 a tree garden was established on campus to experiment with various trees from all over the United States to see if they could successfully live in this area. Its main function and use is as a laboratory for classes.

Garden Located

The garden is located on the block north of 8th North between 4th and 5th East. The block is mapped out with the same directions as the United States. For example, the sequoia tree from California may be sent in the western part of the garden.

Although the botany pond lies in the southwest section of the block instead of the southeast, it represents the Gulf of Mexico. Featured around the pond are five bald cypress trees from Florida.

Many Species

There are now 225 trees of 82 species found in the garden, many of which are rare in Utah.

Those compelled to use the "Lover's Lane" around campus rather than the canyons will be happy to know that the same trees and vegetation found naturally in the canyons are especially preserved along "Lover's Lane."

Outstanding Young Scholars Institute At BYU; Gain Full

Brigham Young University's Junior Engineers and Scientists Summer Institute attended 64 high school students who plan college careers in science fields.

The two week institute was designed to offer students a first hand look at the professional world of science and engineering and also to acquaint them with college curriculum for courses in these fields, according to Dr. Lane Compton, chairman of the institute.

These students were selected on the recommendation of their high school principals on the basis of scholastic records they maintained in high school. Many attended the institute on scholarships and all have extremely high scholastic records, Dr. Compton said.

The institute included daily classes taught by BYU faculty members as well as field trips to industrial sites in the Pr area. Dr. Compton stated r religious services, daily a bles and recreational activi have rounded out the instit program.

Dr. Compton noted that ab Ice was the vocational cho indicated by a majority of dents registered for the tute. Second vocational cho among the students was ele cal engineering.
